

~~SECRET~~MEMO FOR THE RECORD OF THE CLARK COMMITTEE

16 February 1955

1. In writing his report, Colonel Miller told me this morning that he is thinking more and more concerning his proposal for reorganization of the DDI. His most recent organization chart, which he is playing with, runs as follows:

This document has been approved for release through the HISTORICAL REVIEW PROGRAM of the Central Intelligence Agency.

2. Of the four major offices, Miller feels OIP to be the most important, and that the other three function primarily to support its functions. Of the four subdivisions, he feels OBI and ONE the most important, and OCI the least, for, as he put it, OCI only provides what is immediate, on the spot intelligence, and for the purpose of early warning, OBI's efforts will provide the NSC with its long range indicators.

3. OIR, divided into its four major branches, will provide the necessary research for OIP's estimates. This research will result from the collection efforts of OO, which (under his recommendations) will embrace not only domestic collection, but also that phase of overseas intelligence collection currently provided by DD(P). He recommends increasing, in scope and personnel, OO's domestic field offices, and creating similar ones overseas.

4. OCD would be nothing more than reference offices (Library, etc.,) to logistically support the other three offices.

5. Miller claims he is progressing rapidly with his report, that he has not as yet encountered any stumbling blocks or areas of hazy recollection, and that his portion will be finished by early March. Then comes the problem of coordinating his views with those of others on the working level.
